BEAUVAIS WEAVERS—These French weavers at the Gobelins Industries in Paris are making tapestries in the ancient Beauvais method. The horizontal looms, operated with foot pedal releases, are constructed after the manner of the early Beauvais looms on which were woven many fine tapestries for the kings of France.

ARTISTS—Carefully sketching the patterns for weavers to follow in making Gobelins and Beauvais tapestries, these white-smocked French artists were so absorbed in their work that they did not realize that they were being photographed. The design they are working on here is a colorful, modernistic, fish arrangement. The colored pattern will hang directly behind the weaver, and a sketch of the same will lie underneath the warp threads on the Beauvais looms. The Gobelins patterns are sketched in special ink directly on the warping which is on tremendous perpendicular looms, employing a different method altogether.

Gobelins and Beauvais Weavers of France Use Ancient Techniques

(This is another in a series of articles by the Manager of The Textorian.)

Seeing everything that the well-rounded tourist should see is all well and good, but nosing around in interesting areas which are not so highly publicized is my idea of sight-seeing.

On the only morning in Paris free from my tour, I visited the Gobelins Industries of France and was well rewarded for my efforts to get into the establishment, closed to the public at that time. Determined to get inside, I was compelled to use my French, such as it is, because no one whom I encountered spoke a word of English.

Finally, after going through reams of red tape, explaining what it was that I wanted to see, I was referred to Madame Jarry who spoke some English. She, however, could spend only a few minutes with me and turned me over to a gentleman who spoke only French. He escorted me on the trip through the establishment, and it was in this way that I obtained the information for this article. After making several inquiries here and at several book stalls, I discovered that there were no printed information and photos on the Gobelins Industries.

Old Part of Paris

Located on the left bank of the Seine River, in a very old quarter of Paris known as Gobelins, the factory producing the famous Gobelins carpets and tapestries and Beauvais tapestries belongs to the government of France.

The handwoven works of art made there go into government buildings such as embassies and homes of state officials, just as they went into the palaces of the Louis' before the French Revolution. The weavers, now as in the olden days, are commissioned by the state, considering it a great honor to have their work so recognized. Today, they receive less than $100 a month. This is above average pay in France.

Known since the end of the 17th century as Manufactures Nationales des Gobelins, the place takes its name from Jeanne and Philbert Gobelins who made tapestries on the banks of the Seine in the 15th century.

The artist Charles Le Brun, who lived from 1619-1690, was first director of these industries after they had been established by Colbert as the Royal Manufactory, supplying carpets and tapestries for the King's palaces at Fontainebleau and Versailles and elsewhere.

Tapestry for Palaces

I visited these palaces with my tour group the following day and was delighted to see the carpets and tapestries, which had been made at Gobelins centuries ago, still brilliant in color and beautifully preserved in texture.

The Gobelins and Beauvais weavers today use the same techniques which were used when the industry began.

Gobelins Looms

The Gobelins tapestries and rugs are woven on huge perpendicular looms. It takes four years to make a carpet with four weavers working constantly. The warp is rolled on beams high above their heads and the threads hang vertically in front of them. The design has been traced in a special ink on the warp and the weavers weave in the various colors following this design. They watch the development of their work, reflected in mirrors mounted on the other side of the warping. As they work, they use large combs with sturdy handles to mash the threads in place. Close behind them hangs the sketch of the entire design in colors which they are to use in the threads.

The Gobelins tapestries are woven on this same type of large vertical loom with the mirrors mounted in front. It takes 15 months with three weavers working to produce one of these tapestries.

Many of these rugs and tapestries of all wool or all silk have been placed on exhibit in Rome, Portugal and Spain and are considered by connoisseurs to be among the highest achievements in the art of tapestry and rug weaving.

Modern Designs

Many of the designs are in the modern manner, but made in the old method, and they usually depict birds and flowers. One which I liked in particular was taken from a pattern called "Spring of Paris," by the artist Garmoire.

Many Colors

In cabinets along the side of the wall are the bobbins with their myriads of shades of natural dyes from plants and stones, to be selected by the weavers to match the colors in the pattern which they follow. An ancient type French spinning wheel allows them to spin two or more colors together to get a special blend. (The Textorian office now has one of the empty bobbins as a souvenir.)

Each spool and winding group is numbered to facilitate the work of the artist weavers.

Beauvais Weavers

In an upper story of the same old building housing the Gobelins rug and tapestry weavers are the weavers of Beauvais tapestries. Still using the flat looms with releases operated by foot pedals, these weavers produce some of the most beautifully designed tapestries in the world. Originating in Beauvais many centuries ago, this method of weaving is also under the auspices of the government of France, commissioning artists and weavers to the work.

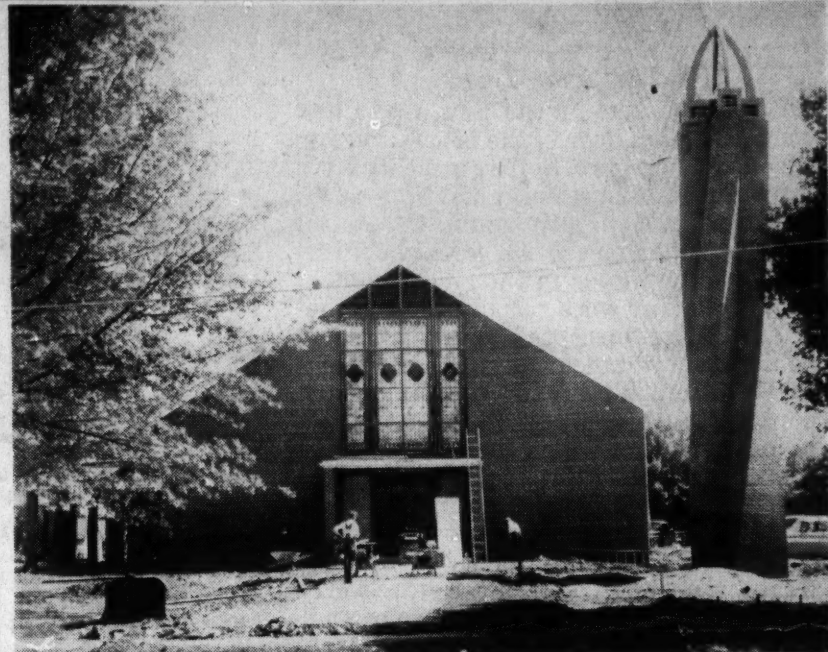

The weaver sits at the flat loom with the colored pattern of the design hanging directly behind him. The pattern is directly under the warping. These looms are much smaller than the Gobelins looms and the products are on a smaller scale.

The artists work close at hand sketching the designs for future works of weaving.

Safety Rules

I was interested in the safety and accident notices on the bulletin board. A copy of the lengthy laws and regulations pertaining to "accidents du travail" or work accidents, stated that they must

Y's Men's Lawn Party To Be Held Tomorrow

Annual Y's Men's lawn party will be held tomorrow afternoon, Saturday, June 20, beginning at 3 o'clock at Fourth Street across from Sikes Drug Store. The place for the lawn party was changed to the present site on Fourth Street in order for it to be more central. General admission is free. Other proceeds will go to community betterment.

Cone Mills Club Elects Officers

T. H. Ward, Revolution Office, was elected president of the Cone Mills Club at the club's annual meeting, Saturday, June 13. Other officers are: Ogburn Blake, vice president; Evelyn Tippet, secretary, and Byron Calhoun, treasurer.

Approximately 250 people participated in the activities of the day which included swimming, boating, fishing contest, movies for the children, miniature golf, ping pong, and other forms of recreation. Everybody seemed to have especially enjoyed the hot dogs and ice cream served outdoors in picnic style.

Outgoing president, Ed Chambers, presided over the open business meeting held in the club house. Brief reports were made of the past year's activities. The five new board members elected for a three-year term were announced. They are: Byron Calhoun, Cleo Honeycutt, Russell Noah, Woodrow Culbreth, and Will Marshburn.

In the fishing contest, a unique thing happened. Martha Anne Williamson, 14, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Colvin Williamson, and Myressa Hughes, 13, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Hughes, walked off with first prize in the children's contest. They were out in a boat and set a toy duck on the edge of it. A 1½ pound pike struck for the duck and landed in the boat. Gene Neiers won the honors in the adult contest with a 3½ pound bass.

Festivities will begin at 3 o'clock and last until 10 o'clock. This annual event has proved itself very popular among the employees of Cone Mills for the past six years. Both old and young alike enjoy the contests, pony rides, fish pond, darts, putting contest, guessing games, free prizes, baseball throwing, rings, concession stand and many other forms of entertainment.

The highlight of the day will be the final counting of votes in the baby contest at 8 o'clock. The contest has been in progress for two weeks and appears to be a very close contest between all entries. The babies entered so far are: Kirby McQueen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira L. McQueen, 1214 Park Ave.; Randy Wayne Oakes, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Oakes, 1515 Summit Ave.; Frances True, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. S. True, 1507 17th St.; Knight Gardner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gardner, 1221 Summit Ave.; Meredith Newnam, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy L. Newnam, 1209 Park Ave.; and Shirley Jean Stone, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Stone, 2206 Jenkins Street.

Family Day

Revolution Baptist Church is planning Family Day for Sunday, Father's Day. The oldest and youngest fathers will be recognized as well as the largest family.

A special offering will be taken for Rest Haven, Winston-Salem, home for the aged.

Learn to Swim

Learn-to-swim classes are being held each Monday and Thursday morning at 9:30 at Proximity Y, Tuesday and Friday at the same time at the White Oak Y.

FIRST DIRECTOR—This statue of the artist Charles Le Brun stands in the somewhat deserted courtyard of the Gobelins establishment on the left bank of the Seine. First director of the Manufacture Nationale des Gobelins founded in 1662 by Colbert, Le Brun, who lived from 1619 to 1690, directed the production of carpets and tapestries for the palaces of Louis IV. Hand weaving is still carried on here in the methods used in those days.

FRENCH TAPESTRY—This is a detail of the tapestry "La Dame a la Licorne," which is now in the Cluny Museum in Paris. Woven in the 16th century, this piece is typical of French hand weaving of that period.

TYPICAL DESIGN—French weavers today, as in centuries past, delight in birds and flowers in their tapestries. This small detail from a large piece known as "La Promenade," was made in the 16th century, and now hangs in the Cluny Museum in Paris.

Week End Trip

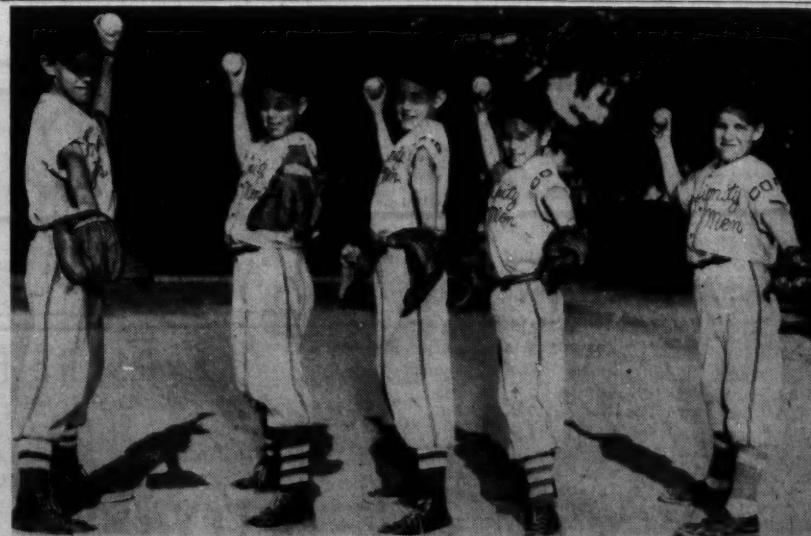

Boy Scout Troop 13 went on a trip last week end to Shalkeford Island near Morehead City. The group camped and enjoyed deep sea fishing.

Six adults accompanied the 12 youths, who visited Fort Macon and Atlantic Beach on their way back.

Club To Have Supper

Proximity-Print Works Community Club will have a hamburger supper at the home of Mrs. H. M. Angel next Tuesday night at 6:30. If it should be raining, the supper will be at the Proximity Y.

Reservations should be called in to Mrs. Angel or Mrs. John Scott before next Monday night.

On The Same Team

The action taken in the South against the Ku Klux Klan during the last few years is indeed encouraging. Self-respecting citizenship cannot tolerate organizations such as the Ku Klux Klan although in the South the name at one time had a certain degree of prestige. Conditions in the South following the Civil War were responsible for the KKK and it was accepted as a necessary organization by much of the respected Southern citizenship. Today the same type of people, after learning about the activities of the organization which included intimidation, coercion, restraint, etc., realize that a one time respected name was being used by an organization which acts contrary to the well being of the South as well as the nation.

Certain newspapers within the state were largely responsible for the exposure of the Ku Klux and aided greatly in dealing fatal blows to the organization. Much credit is due those responsible for the publicity campaigns against the Ku Klux.

Recently, awards were made to some of these editors which was good and proper. The organization making the awards, however, needs to review some of its sponsored programs which are not devoid of intimidation, coercion and deprivation of American privileges.

We might likewise add that the speech made by Jonathan Daniels in which he did not condone the Ku Klux but seemed to indicate that members of Congress who do not agree with him are worse than the Ku Klux does not register too well in this corner. Mr. Daniels needs to be reminded of practices which he apparently condones in other organizations which share his political ideology before he throws stones at members of Congress who do not agree with him. In our opinion it would enhance his reputation for intellectual honesty if he were to throw a few rocks in the direction of some of the left wing organizations that seem to play on the same team with him.

Is it politics, Mr. Daniels?

DOCTOR EINSTEIN AND YOU

Up until a few days ago, it had never occurred to us that Dr. Albert Einstein's Theory of Relativity and search for a Unified Field had anything to do with us common people and with our lives and problems.

But actually, the thing he is driving at is the same problem that is behind most of the disputes in the world today, whether these disputes be between people, between government and people, or between governments.

We were so excited over our discovery that we wanted to let you in on it.

II

Our clue came from the "New York Times" of March 29th, which pointed out that the end result of Einstein's search for a Unified Field was to prove that nature is consistent, that the things that happen in nature can be predicted.

(Don't get discouraged: this is not going to be complicated.)

Einstein's opponents stick to what is called the Heisenberg Uncertainty Principle and claim that past knowledge cannot be a certain guide to the future actions of nature because "all knowledge is based on probability and thus (knowledge of the past) at best can be only statistical in nature."

The Uncertainty Principle is the same one that many social scientists are trying to apply to human nature and to our everyday lives.

If they are right there is no consistency in human nature, and for that reason there is no value in studying (or being guided by) the past economic and political experiences of the human race.

III

This "nothing-is-true-for-sure" school of thought has always shocked us because we have always believed that God created both the Universe and Man according to a Plan.

In this Dr. Einstein agreed with us, at least partly, when he said, "I cannot believe that God plays dice with the (universe)."

We in our turn, do not believe that God plays dice with the human race: we believe that there are natural laws governing the harmony and efficiency of human actions.

This makes us believe that it is, therefore, a crime against man to pooh-pooh his earnest efforts to find in history the clues to his future.

IV

In our humble opinion, this "uncertainty principle," applied to human beings, can wreck our civilization.

It amounts to throwing away the rule-book of life, with the result that everybody can claim he is right and justify anything he is strong enough or persuasive enough to accomplish.

Russia can claim that Communism is right, and in its names justify aggression; school teachers can claim that children should not be disciplined nor made to take examinations; and thus turn out a generation of uneducated citizens; political agitators can claim that private property is the curse of civilization, and appeal to the "masses" to destroy it.

To make matters worse, the absence of a rule-book means that every event is a crisis that must be judged as if it had never happened before.

In other words, life becomes one great series of emergencies, and that is the best way in the world to get yourself a first-class nervous breakdown.

Personally, we don't believe that the terrifying increase in the population of our mental institutions comes from the "speed of modern life" nearly as much as it comes from having stopped believing in things.

Pythian Echoes

by R. Cole Lee

Pythian George L. Stansbury will leave shortly to fill his new job at the State Hospital, Chapel Hill, where he will become the chief mortician. Needless to say we shall miss George tremendously as he is regular in attendance and willing to fulfill his part of any task. We wish for this Pythian Brother the very best in his new undertaking and trust that he will continue doing his part as a good disciple of Pythianism.

Pythian Parks Johnson is a patient at the Guilford Sanatorium. Any member of the Lodge finding the opportunity to visit him would receive a most hearty welcome. Parks, O boy, we shall unite our hearts in prayer for your speedy recovery and trust that it will not be too far distant when you shall be among us again.

Pythians will enjoy themselves July 7 at the Imperial Basha's Ceremonial to be held at the local Castle Hall with W. B. Burke as master of ceremonies. Programs will be placed in the mail very soon as a reminder. Let's turn out and give to John M. Lawrence of Oklahoma City a rousing welcome. Remember, one's first impression is the longest in memory.

Page Arthur Balliff was obligated during the Monday gathering and will now be given the second degree coming June 22. I need not say anything further, boys, as you know much about the second degree. The least I can do here is to urge you to be on hand.

Pythian Ray Payne, chairman of the Lodge's Little League Team, spoke very encouragingly of the work being carried on in behalf of the youngsters of the neighborhood. Each boy has been fully equipped with uniforms and the necessary artillery for a successful season, so boys, go to it and bring credit to your team.

Pythian V. O. Watson, delegate to the Grand Lodge, spoke of the 82nd Session. From his report we trust that the attending members will find a new incentive and thus exert themselves in the cause of Pythianism. Pythianism if rightly practiced and lived will undoubtedly develop self-expression, self-reliance, self-confidence and self-assurance. For the timid, weak, indifferent and lazy, Pythianism offers a challenge to accept responsibility and thus unfold your character and bring out the best in you.

Many of our local Pythians are now making preparations for the "BIG" Convention to be held at St. Louis, Mo., on August 9-14. This convention promises to be packed full of fun as well as a dignified week of business for the Imperial Palace. For those attending, a free boat trip on the wonderful Mississippi River will be included in their sight-seeing tours. This trip on the Admiral Steamer will be remembered for a long time to come. Those interested in attending this convention should write to R. L. Springer, Sr., 3507 Pine St., St. Louis 3, Mo.

Cone Fabrics Facts

CONE SHIRTING FLANNELS
For America's Great Outdoors

SHIRTING FLANNELS: Woven plaid cotton flannels in Fall and Winter shirting weights.

Here is one of the charter members of the Cone Fabric Family, with a large and loyal following wherever Fall and Winter shirtings are in evidence.

Cone Shirting Flannels are called STALWART flannels. They are Sanforized and come in a wide assortment of checks and plaids. Colors are particularly deep, rich and fashion right; clarity of pattern is outstanding.

Distinguishing qualities of these colorful fabrics are warmth without weight as well as smoothness and softness. The nap is even—pleasant to the touch and easy on the wearer. No wonder they are long-time favorites of the whole family. Cone Shirting Flannels are popular fabrics for sports shirts in both men's and boys' sizes. They are also important as men's work shirtings. And you see them contribute warmth and color as linings to denim coats and other outerwear.

The brighter colors and bolder contrasts which have been introduced recently have inspired manufacturers to use Cone Shirting Flannels as linings for boys' dungarees, with cuffs turned up wide to match the shirt. It all adds up to a substantial net gain in color and character.

ACCIDENT PREVENTION

contest of its kind although all Cone plants are entered in the statewide textile safety contest each year in the North Carolina Labor Department Contest.

In this particular contest, all accidents requiring the care of a doctor, or other medical care outside the plant or technical care outside a department or plant. Lost time accidents will count more points against the plant than those requiring medical care but not causing lost time. Accidents requiring first aid care will not count in any way.

All scores will be kept as "frequencies" per million man hours so that smaller units can be compared with larger ones. However, the extremely small units will not have to compete with the extremely large ones.

Competing for one award will be Randleman, Power, Guilford Products, Electricians, Knox (Construction), Central Maintenance, and the Rayon Dyeing and Finishing. Those competing for the other award will be the larger plants, White Oak, Revolution, Proximity, Print Works, Tabardrey, Minicola, Rayon, Edna, Granite and Pineville. Current scores will be published several times during the contest in The Textorian and in other ways.

All medical care accidents are being used in scoring in order to give a fairer and more accurate score. However, in order that emphasis may be continued on reporting every injury and having it treated, a drive will also be made to remind every employee to do this. Every small injury should be cared for before it can become a large injury.

Further details of the contest will be available during the next few days and will be carried in The Textorian.

Cotton Time

Its cotton picking time. Women all over America are picking cottons for their family's summer wardrobe.

Statistics indicate that they are picking more and prettier cottons this year than ever before. One reason is the trend towards "decorated cotton" with studded rhinestones, bold embroideries, appliqued flowers and fancy braids that dress up cottons to party-going importance. Another reason is that improvements in cotton, such as Sanforized terry cloth, old-fashioned twills in new-fashioned pastel shades, and prints designed for special end uses such as men's sport shirts, have inspired leading designers to style innovations that make the most of special features.

For instance, because terry cloth shrinks as much as 4 inches a yard, designers, until this season, could only use this fabric in box coats, peignoir robes and other enveloping garments. Now that terry is available with the Sanforized label, the best designers are using it for snug-fitting little boy shorts, housecoats and robes with smooth-fitting bodices, and trim play clothes. As a result, everyone from two-year old junior to dad, mother, and even grandmother will wear terry fashions this year.

Once, too, the men in the family wore white shirts from sunup 'till long after sun-down, but now they enjoy the relaxation that comes at the end of the work day when they slip into short sleeved, open throated and even tail ventilated sport shirts. The brighter the color, and the gaudier the prints, the more popular they are and usually the more expensive. This year, fabric makers have gone all out to design special prints for sport shirts.

The result is the man of the house can take his pick from those that sell at $2 to those that sell at $12. Whether it is $2 or $12, smart shoppers for these sport shirts make it part of their buying technique to look for the Sanforized label so they can be sure that the comfortable fit they buy remains through repeated washings.

be reported within 48 hours to the chief of services and to services of personnel.

Since the days when the artist Le Brun headed the Gobelin Industries, artists have lived in the brown stone domer roofed buildings which form a courtyard centered by Le Brun's statue.

A second-story window, where a typical French bird cage adorned the sill, marked the place in which the now famous modern artist Henri Matisse had lived as a struggling young aspirant. (I later saw the palatial hotel in southern France, near the Riviera, where he, now over 80 years old, continues his work.)

Although the days of Gobelin's being the home of a great number of artists is in the past, some artists still make their homes in these buildings today.

Seeing the Gobelin and Beauvais weavers at work and knowing that they have dedicated themselves to their art, just as those who preceded them, brings a very refreshing feeling in this day and age. One can say that here truly is art for art's sake, for there is very little material reward in store. Quality, not quantity, is the objective.

After seeing the ancient rugs and tapestries which were woven in these very rooms, one also realizes that the weavers are not working for themselves or for this age alone. Perfection in their weaving is their goal, and when they have achieved it, their work is for all time.
